課程描述 Course Description
This course explores a variety of representations of women who violate and/or defy the traditional binary gender norm. Under what circumstance that such representation became possible? How do these roles respond to the generic, social, cultural, and political contexts in which they arise? Since cinema is a transnational medium from the very beginning, how does the cinematic configurations of deviant women also a result of cross-cultural inflection? Through such exploration, this course complicates the naïve celebration of female characters who dare to step outside of the gender box to attend to how representation is a site, as well as a stake of power struggle.
課程目標 Course Objectives
The term 'genre' (meaning 'type') is most often used to describe recognizable elements that define films according to particular audience tastes ('romantic comedy' , 'horror' , etc.) and is synonymous with Hollywood and popular cinema. This course aims to guide students through the complex and ever-changing definition of 'genre' in both film production and film studies, exploring its history, theory, its crucial position in popular and commercial forms, and its reliance on both similarity, and, critically, difference to continue to evolve.
